Ⅰ. Location

Located in the central part of China, Henan is often referred to as Zhongyuan or Zhongzhou, which literally mean "central plain" or "midland".

Although Henan, the name of the province, means "south of the Yellow River", approximately a quarter of the province lies north of the Yellow River, also known as the Huang He.

With an area of 167,000 square kilometers (64,479 square miles) , Henan is China's third most populous province with a population of over 100 million. If it were a country by itself, Henan would be the 14th most populous country in the world, ahead of Egypt and Vietnam.

Henan province is considered the cradle of the Chinese civilization due to its location along the Yellow River. The rich historic heritage has endowed Henan with numerous historic treasures.

The remains of some of the earliest human settlements have been unearthed here, including the over 8000-year-old Peiligang Culture Site, the 6000-year-old Yangshao Culture Remains and the 5000-year-old Dahe Culture Remains. All these cultural remains have profound significance in the history of the Chinese civilization.

It has been the political, economic and cultural center of the country for more than 3,000 years. More than 20 dynasties set their capitals here and the four great inventions of ancient China all originated from Henan. A visit to Henan is like a talk with many historical sites.
